

Reporting the Energy Transition

Who owns the grid?

Transmission in most African markets sits with a state utility. The question a reporter must ask is who carries the debt when a new line is financed.

Three numbers

Installed capacity, peak demand, and unserved energy. A minister quoting only the first is telling you a third of the story.

Who to call first

The regulator publishes licence conditions, and they are public. Read them before the interview rather than after it, because the useful question is never whether a promise was made but whether it was a condition of the licence.
